INTRODUCTION

- Improvisational storytelling: 1+ agents collaborating to create a new story in real time without advance notice of the topic.
- Can an AI improvise stories?
  - This can be a difficult problem for humans, but extremely challenging for AI because of the space of possible stories: anything that can be expressed with language.
- Agents have a hard time predicting the next sentence in a story
  - Solution: event representations
  - [subject, verb, direct object, modifier]
  - Agents have an easier time predicting the next expected event (Event-to-Event)
  - Event representations can still be “translated” back into English sentences (Event-to-Sentence)
- What about specifics like character names?
  - Memory network remembers what has been said in the story and fills in the blanks in our generalized, generated sentences.
